

Liam King's advocacy with The King and Bishop of London

Today, in a surprise, at King's Cross I was introduced to His Majesty King Charles. In a spontaneous outpouring I spoke on the need for His Majesty's government to introduce the Open Dialogue Approach for sufferers of emotional distress. The King requested further details and presented with his equerry contact details.

The Bishop of London (she/her) in a further conversation requested a copy of a letter I had published in the Financial Times on the structural barriers that prevent those known to psychiatry returning to the workforce.

The Archbishop of Canterbury appeared annoyed when I made a joke about ecumenical matters. Ah well, you can't win them all.
